

Through Zion's Window

JUNE 2021

Dear friends in Christ,

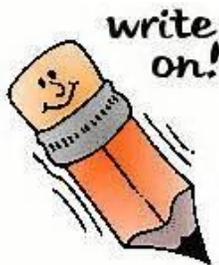

I've noticed that pastors are usually expected to have the right words to say. Words of inspiration, words of consolation, or words of education. At any given time or place, at the drop of a hat pastors are asked to lead devotions, prayers, chip in on study groups and any of a half dozen other ways have "an answer". I understand why, one of my early mentors called pastors "over-educated bums". I think he was emphasizing the over-educated part more than the bum part 😊. We are thoroughly schooled and prepared for the role we take on, we write many papers, read many books, and learn many, many words. So, I guess it makes sense that we can be expected to always have something to say.

And honestly, for those of you who know me, it may seem I always have something to say, in depth about pretty much anything and everything. Whether it is about politics, education, or current events I love to speak words and share my opinions. But, while I can't speak for other pastors, I have to admit I sometimes struggle to find the right words for many situations. Words of consolation evade me when I'm in a hospital room, words of inspiration often effectively hide when I'm in small groups, and words of education become dry and boring.

Why am I sharing this with you? After 11 years in ministry, I've fully realized something. I'm not all that good at writing newsletter pages. Many of you have noticed that every few months Danielle or Addy come up with something for the front page – I am so thankful for that. I have to admit I'm losing the creativity needed to come up with ideas for the newsletter. As the end of the month nears, I panic a little bit. What should I write about this time? What do people want/need to hear?

I want to issue a challenge to all of you. As Lutherans we believe in the "Priesthood of all Believers". We all have stories of inspiration, we have received and shared words of consolation, and we have been told things in ways that opened our eyes to seeing God's Word in new ways. I'd like to hear your stories, and I bet I'm not the only one. I'd like to invite you to share your stories.

There are a couple of ways to do this. If you are a writer then feel free to put pen to paper and email it to the office or myself, or you can drop it by the office or give it to me Sunday morning. If you struggle putting words together then invite me for coffee. Share your story and I will help find some words. Lastly, if you don't want to share a story yet, but you would like to hear about something or would like me to write about something let me know. Point me in a direction and, as many of you know, I can come up with words.

Yours in Christ,

Pastor Doug
